ARVERNE OFFERING

Children by the Sea Make the Banner Contribution.

Charitable Little Folks Raise $345 for the Babies' Fund.

The Free Doctors' Visits Bring Hope to Despairing Hearts.

Clothing Distributed Among Hundreds of Half-Clad Babies.

A pretty little resort by the sea is Arverne. It is about two miles this side of Far Rock away. It has fifty or sixty cool and cosy cottages and a large and handsome hotel where transient boarders may enjoy the double delight of touching elbows with the ocean and of having an exquisite sense of envy of those who dwell in the trim cottages and exploit the ocean breezes the summer round.

The beach is said to be the finest on the South shore. The sand is quite as white as the flannel suits, the sunshine almost as brilliant as the "blazers." And the sunsets! They are often so fine that there is more than a suspicion that they have been contrived by the managers of the hotel.

On mellow moonlight nights, the children say, the mermaids of Arverne hold their glasses to the moonbeams. But, fine as all things are at Arverne, with its unmistakable, its real, its delightful breeze, its superior ocean and its moonlight mermaids—most of all that is there are the children. Their eyes flash like the breaking waves; their laughter is like the ripple of the surf on the shore. The gray old ocean adopts them, and all are children of Neptune. Some day a miracle will happen on Manhattan Island, and you will see in New York the sign: "Flats to let; children from Arverne wanted." They will truly be wonderful.

Well, these charming little children who live and in the sea and who have been adopted by Neptune, often think of the children who are as far from the sea as the little shed. Four or five families had pitched their tents on the beach for the summer, and the little fairies, they came to the farthest they could say. "We're really surprised to see you here. What a chance for a bargain! We'll take this. And so the little girls made $13 for the other little children who couldn't come to see the ocean, though it is free to look at.

Last Thursday morning the little girls were trying their wings. This summer the same four little girls, Miss Kitty Campbell, Miss Sue Derickson, Miss Louise Campbell and Miss Kate Campbell, had pitched their tents on the beach for the summer, and the little fairies, they came to the farthest they could say. "We're really surprised to see you here. What a chance for a bargain! We'll take this. And so the little girls made $13 for the other little children who couldn't come to see the ocean, though it is free to look at.

In fact, all the little girls were very busy. They had pitched their tents on the beach for the summer, and the little fairies, they came to the farthest they could say. "We're really surprised to see you here. What a chance for a bargain! We'll take this. And so the little girls made $13 for the other little children who couldn't come to see the ocean, though it is free to look at.

The fair itself was a great day at Arverne. The little girls were very busy. They had pitched their tents on the beach for the summer, and the little fairies, they came to the farthest they could say. "We're really surprised to see you here. What a chance for a bargain! We'll take this. And so the little girls made $13 for the other little children who couldn't come to see the ocean, though it is free to look at.

There were two fancy-work tables, the first managed by Miss Sue Derickson and the second by Miss Kate Campbell. The first table was for the sale of the little girls' work, and the second table was for the sale of the little girls' work. The first table was for the sale of the little girls' work, and the second table was for the sale of the little girls' work.

thinking all the time of the less fortunate children and the not too cozy and pleasant tenement-houses in New York, and so they gave all their money to THE EVENING WORLD'S Sick Baby Fund. It is the banner contribution. Besides this, $5 more was received yesterday from Miss May Derickson, which makes the total $345.

Arverne is a pleasant place, but what wonderful children it has!

Are they really little children, or angels at Arverne?
